What is a Small Bowel Procedure?

The small bowel study may or may not be performed with the Upper GI series. Following the drinking of several glasses of barium, delayed images of the gastrointestinal tract will be obtained at specified time intervals by the technologist. The small bowel series is complete when the barium reaches the colon.

The patient will need to remain in the department while the technologist takes images during this time. The speed with which the barium moves through the small intestine will depend on the patient's willingness to drink the barium and the presence of any disturbances in the flow process of the bowel.

The procedure will take approximately 1-4 hours.

Preparation:

1. The patient may eat or drink anything they want the day before the exam until 11 p.m. They are encouraged to drink plenty of fluids.
2. After 11 p.m. the patient is not to eat or drink anything until the exam has been completed.
3. After 12 a.m. (midnight), the patient is not to smoke or chew gum until the exam has been completed.
